

BLUDGEON

A short play

CHARACTERS:

Carl

Galusha

The Hamburglar

SCENE: The interior of the Bungalow Bar Commissary.

CARL: I say, Galusha! Isn't that the Hamburglar, star of stage, screen and radio?

GALUSHA: Yes, it is. Let us say "Hello" to the person who is called "The Hamburglar," and, perchance, obtain his autograph.

CARL: What a good idea.

HAMBURGLAR: Hello, boys. What can I do for you?

CARL: Mister Hamburglar, we would like your autograph!

GALUSHA: And for saying "Hello," to you, you great man!

HAMBURGLAR: Why don't I just burgle your hams instead?

CARL: What an honor that would be!

HAMBURGLAR: OK! {He burgles their hams and runs off into the distance.}

GALUSHA: What a singular gentleman!

Oh It's Hard to be Humble

Oh it's hard to be able to hum

It's hard to daze a disco of dizzying disastrous daisies

A wiley wild wonderland of wondrous wiggling worms

Welcome to the garden

The warden is hardened to the cartons of milk waiting at the gates

It waits to corrode, it chokes with they're salty meat hooks

Five smaller pegs on the metacarpus of a losing campaign

My determination never wanes

Lips numb from wordless singing

Disagreements of twisted hips

Knees bent like a hunchback

Oh it's a hard to keep track, when the flaming whip cracks

Goodbye to the garden

The animals jargon inconceivable

You can't see it over the fog from the turtle snapping dogs
