Unsuccessful Third Parties of the 19th Century

By Charlie Angleberger

The Getalong Party (1860-1860): Rendered immediately obsolete by the Constitutional Unionists.

The Public Osculation Party (1898-1899): A one-plank party dedicated to the permittance of necking in public areas. Of course, none of the supporters were old enough to vote at the time.

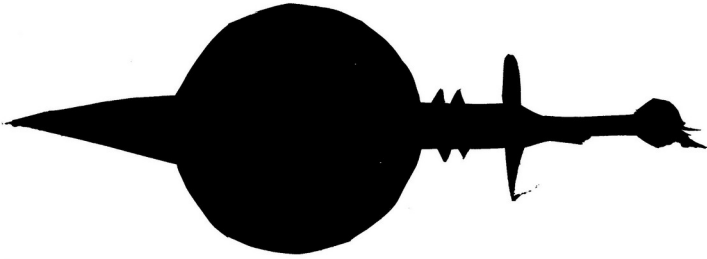

The Honest Grifter Party (1888-1895): With the slogan “Might as Well be Honest,” the Honest Grifters admitted exactly how and when they would rip off the voters. Not much of a national presence, but somewhat popular in Chicago and New York.

The Less of Texas Party (1845-1850): Led by disgruntled Whigs and various ex-Texans, the party called for Less of Texas. They were dissolved when someone asked “Where would we put the Texas we don’t need?”

The Limuloid Party (1832-1849): Convinced that Ephraim Limuloid, Assistant Treasurer of Botetourt County, VA, was actually G-d, it was decided by local Botetourtites that Limuloid ought to be President, too. Nobody was more surprised by this than Ephraim Limuloid.
